Symptoms of Latex Allergies

- Red, crusty rash stopping at the wrist where the glove ends
- Red, itchy bumps sometimes associated with runny nose, red eyes and/or asthma
- Rare and severe latex allergies can even result in shock

How to Avoid Latex Allergies

- Latex allergies are often aggravated by powdered gloves which can carry latex proteins. Use a non-powdered glove.
- Best of all, use a non-latex glove such as a nitrile or vinyl.

KeepKleen® 4 mil. Disposable Nitrile Medical-exam Grade Gloves

KeepKleen® medical-exam grade, 100% nitrile gloves provide superior strength with better puncture resistance. The cuff edge is beaded for extra strength to prevent ripping during donning. Lightly powdered with food-grade cornstarch to ease donning and doffing, or available as powder-free. Gloves are also available in two thicknesses.

Manufactured in an ISO 9002 registered facility, gloves are tested and certified under ISO 11193, and are also CFIA approved for food handling.

Nitrile provides an alternative glove solution for individuals who are allergic to natural rubber latex.
